

Made to make them move

APRIL 2013 NATIONAL LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTURE MONTH

Landscape architects play a critical role in designing environments that promote human health and well-being. The trouble is, the public rarely knows that.

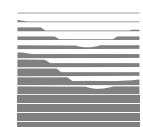

Make a commitment to be part of this year's National Landscape Architecture Month by working with your American Society of Landscape Architects chapter to promote the profession's role in active living. No activity near you? Create one on your own or with your firm.

If possible, involve schools to help raise early awareness of what the profession has to offer for budding designers. And let ASLA know what you did so we can document it as a model for the future.

Visit asla.org/NLAMEvents.aspx for information and resources.

Questions? Contact ASLA's Phil Stamper at pstamper@asla.org.
And make sure to have some fun!

AMERICAN SOCIETY OF LANDSCAPE
ARCHITECTS