- Ongoing promotion of the site focuses on the need to expose the profession to the widest audiences, including in underserved areas.
2013 and 2014...

- A brochure was created to introduce the profession to junior high and high school guidance counselors, with an ask that members personally deliver them to underserved schools.

• Releases are also sent out recognizing National Hispanic Heritage Month each year. Most ASLA releases now are translated routinely into Spanish and sent to Spanish-language media since.
As an outcomes from the Summit, ASLA hosted a tour in August 2015 of its Green Roof and introduced our new Green Street demonstration project for the National Building Museum’s Teen Council, primarily made up of minority junior high and high school students.

This was followed by a charrette to help the students design their own green street.

Such hands-on outreach has continued with school group tours of the green roof. Since the opening of the ASLA Center for Landscape Architecture in January 2017, ASLA has hosted diverse students from Johnson Middle School and college students from the historical black college, Morgan State.
2015 and 2016 ...

- As a test based on 2015 summit outcomes, ASLA formally adopted a primarily minority school in Washington, D.C.'s underserved Southeast. With the Potomac chapter, staff conducted three activities with the students, including a field trip to landscape sites. Rewarding, if a struggle to get school buy-in.
As a test based on last year’s summit outcomes, ASLA adopted a primarily minority middle school in Washington, D.C.’s Southeast. With the Potomac chapter, staff conducted three activities with the students, including a field trip to landscape sites.

ASLA reupped the Adopt-a-School effort with a new school but is still having difficulty getting school’s full commitment despite the fact that it is a formal D.C. program. On summit attendees’ recommendation, we may refocus effort on boys’ and girls’ clubs or in partnership with existing efforts. We hope to create a resource kit for members and chapters once we resolve beta issues.
At the recommendation of summit attendees, a continuing education session for the 2015 Annual Meeting in Chicago was submitted and accepted. The topic was a cross-generational conversation about diversity, with an emphasis on helping attendees recruit and retain minority talent. Two past Summit attendees, Janelle Johnson and Luis Gonzalez, shared the stage with Stephen Carter and Sandy Gonzalez, facilitated by our very own Juanita.

Diversity was the topic of one of two General Sessions at this year’s Annual Meeting in October in New Orleans, reaching thousands of attendees. The conversation continued on the EXPO floor, and the taped General Session remains available on asla.org. Stories of panelists’ experiences were edited to smaller bites to share with social media.
